

On Jun 23, 2005, at 6:57 PM, wrote:

Hey Mr. T.

Well I'm up here at the U of A taking Math for the New Start Program. As a requirement for the New Start program, we have to attend workshops with our peer advisors (PA) everyday for about an hour.

I write to you because, well first of all to say hello! Let you know where at least one of your students is, at least where your favorite student is. But also because at one of our workshops my PA started asking what we think can help us succeed in college, and when she would give us tips i would connect them to the Habits of Highly Effective People. Just want you to know that i understood them during class, but didn't really grasp them until i used them, like now. The main one that my PA seemed to be interested in is Beginning With The End in Mind. She said that we cant just wing it, we have to know what it is that we are going for.

Also, i knew the Habits of Mind helped me in my position papers, but i didn't think i would use them outside of your classroom. But without even noticing it, i used them on my placement test for English, and placed where i am supposed to be.

I've been to a few "leadership workshops" and i comment on the habits there... so i've been using them.

tell ms. thomson say hi... and emily too!!!! dont forget to write to me.

-LIZZY

Lizelle Peraza